Wal-mart is big enough as a corporation without becoming a financial leader.

In areas where Wal-mart has come in, many of the local business have been forced out. Wal-mart needs to put their money back into their existing holdings to take care of their employees. They presently pay as little as is legally possible and give no benefits to their present employees. If they are allowed to expand into other areas, they would continue their practices of putting more people on welfare while reaping profits for the family and their major stock holders. Instead of giving them the green light to add more people, they should be forced to take care of their present employees.
